

Germany: unemployment in Berlin (1931)

1. The people most affected in this image are all the men who are unemployed. This impacted different groups like the middle class because it created new poverty among them.
2. Specific details in the images that show economic hardship is a guy having a sign on his back talking about their situation and a graph showing the unemployment rate in Germany.
3. A strong leader would probably promise to fix their unemployment rates or economic crisis. They would probably tell the people that they will make more jobs for everybody for a short period of time until they can fix everyone being broke.

German Bank crisis (1931)

1. The people most affected in this image are everyone who had money saved in those banks shown. Different groups of people impacted are the workers who lost their jobs, and Germans that lost their savings when the bank failed them.
2. A specific detail that shows economic hardship is all the people surrounding the bank, this is most likely because the people were calling out the bank for messing up so badly.
3. A problem in the image that a leader would promise to fix would be a better way to store the peoples cash and make sure when someone asks to take their money out to make sure they actually have it. This would appeal to the citizens because they'd be overly happy that someone finally didn't mess up their economy.

Soup Kitchens in Berlin

1. The people most affected in this image are the families struggling to afford food. This shows how the group of people most affected are the low class, they had to rely on free soup shops to make sure they wouldn't starve.
2. A specific detail that shows economic hardship is the lines of people in the pictures getting ready to be served free soup instead of them being able to make their own dinner or lunch because money was scarce.
3. A problem in this image that a leader would promise to fix is probably to make food affordable until everyone is able to afford the normal prices for it again. This promise would appeal to the citizens because I believe they got tired of only eating soup and not having enough money for anything else.

The Jarrow March, Britain (1936)

1. The people most affected in this image are the unemployed. This shows us how the group of people impacted by the great depression were the lower and middle class.
2. Specific details in this image that show economic hardship are the signs being held up and the group of people marching demanding for the government to take action for their unemployment.

3. A problem shown in this image that a leader would promise to fix would most likely be to create new jobs. This would appeal to the citizens because they are all looking for jobs and someone from the government (which would be the leader) would have finally taken action.

French Workers' Strike (1936)

1. The people most affected in this image are everyone protesting due to economic hardship and political division. The group of people impacted by this were the workers. This is because they faced low pay and unemployment, while business owners worried about losses

2. A specific detail in this image that shows economic hardship are the signs and people protesting

3. A problem shown in this image that a leader would promise to fix would be them trying to bring the divided political status together so then they could get rid of the economic hardship.

Austrian civil conflict (1934)

1. The people most affected in this image would be the people involved in politics. The group of people impacted by this would be the middle - high class, which would be the political people, since the violence against them rose.

2. A specific detail in this image that shows economic hardship is the surroundings. This would be the anger/violence of the people against politicians.

3. A problem shown in this image that a leader would promise to fix would be to fix the economy anyway they can so the political violence goes down, at least slowly but surely.

Spanish Bread Lines (Early 1930's)

1. The people most affected in this image would be everyone in the nation. So the groups of people impacted by the great depression in this image would basically be everyone since it says poverty and inequality contributed to the nation's instability.

2. A specific detail in this image that shows economic hardship would be people running because they have looted probably a store, house, or shop.

3. A problem shown in this image that a leader would promise to fix would be to bring peace, or equality back and to fix poverty by focusing on fixing education, social protection, and economic empowerment.

Nazi Rally In Germany (Early 1930's)

1. The people most affected in this image would be the desperate people who were supporting these extremist political movements.

The groups of people impacted by the great depression in these images would be the low, middle, and high classes because they were all desperate.

2. A specific detail in this image that shows economic hardship would be their surroundings. I say this because little did they all know they would be supporting a political party that was absolutely brutal.

3. A problem shown in this image that a leader would promise to fix would most likely be the desperation of the people. I believe this would be said so they can support their extremist movements without questioning it.

Italian Fascist Youth Rally

1. The people most affected in this image would be everyone who fell for leaders' promises. The groups of people impacted by the great depression in these images would probably be all the classes of people because I would assume they all fell for the authoritarian leaders propaganda.
2. A specific detail in this image that shows economic hardship would be the people rallying up to go support this leader because they have horrible national stability.
3. A problem shown in this image that a leader would promise to fix would be exactly what it says, which is promising to fix stability and national pride. As we can see it worked because they supported the authoritarian leader.

Polish Rural Poverty

1. The people most affected in this image would be the populations in Eastern Europe. The groups of people impacted by the great depression in these images are the high, middle and low classes because their agriculture collapsed.
2. A specific detail in this image that shows economic hardship is the signs the people are that probably have to do with not having enough money for their agriculture
3. A problem shown in this image that a leader would promise to fix could be that they would fix the agricultural collapse by enacting policies to stabilize markets.
