1. What emotions do the Soviet and American posters try to make people feel?
Give at least two examples from the posters you viewed.

The soviet poster was trying to make people feel pride and unity, showing the strength they had and the achievements they accomplished. The posters showed that communism threatened freedom and democracy.

2. How did the United States and the Soviet Union portray each other during the Cold War?
Explain how propaganda was used to create fear, pride, or distrust.

They both used posters, movies and speeches to gain support for their governments.

3. Which poster do you think was the most effective or persuasive?
Describe the images, symbols, colors, or words that made it powerful.

I think the "is this tomorrow" poster was more persuasive and effective because it used fear to get people's attention.

4. What similarities and differences do you notice between Soviet and American propaganda posters?
Think about themes like patriotism, military strength, freedom, or peace.

Both countries showed their country as successful and strong. They used soldiers, flags and symbols for their posters.

5. Do you think propaganda still exists today?
Compare Cold War propaganda to modern examples from social media, politics, advertisements, or news. Explain your reasoning.

Yes, I do think it still exists today in the world, it's usually spread through technology and social media, on television and advertisements.
